

According to accounts from Tunis of the 24th of June, the Bey had arrived at Sousa with 15,000 men, which the intense heat of the weather had reduced to a most deplorable condition. The Arabs had retired at his approach, and he was in want of both water and provisions. It was said that he was proceeding towards Sfax and Gabes, where provision had been forwarded to him, and that he would return by Keff and the Western frontier of the Regency ; that is to say, that he would march along the French frontier - the precise movement which the French Government were determined to prevent.

of their Pracnau majesties.

According to accounts from Tunis of the 24th of June, the Bey had arrived at Sousa with 15,000 men, which the intense heat of the weather had reduced to a most deplorable condition. The Arabs had retired at his approach, and he was in want of both water and provisions. It was said that he was proceeding towards Sfax and Gabes, where provision had been forwarded to him, and that he would return by Keff and the Western frontier of the Regency ; that is to say, that he would march along the French frontier—the precise movement which the French Government were determined to prevent.

A letter dated Vienna. July 10th. speaks of